Kelley Drye Merges With Collier Shannon

Law.com
April 19, 2006

Kelley Drye & Warren and Collier Shannon Scott have officially merged.

The firm will operate as Kelley Drye & Warren, except in the Washington, D.C., area, where the firm will be known as Kelley Drye Collier Shannon.

The newly merged firm has nearly 400 lawyers, with more than 150 located in the Washington, D.C., area. Gross revenues are expected to be more than $220 million.

The move expands Kelley Drye's presence in Washington, where Kelley Drye and Collier Shannon have had practices for several decades.

Danny E. Adams, who will remain as managing partner of Kelley Drye's northern Virginia office, and Brad E. Mutschelknaus, who managed Kelley Drye's Washington, D.C., office, will continue as members of the firmwide executive committee.

As a result of the merger, Kelley Drye expects to offer new or enhanced capabilities in such areas as international trade and customs, advertising, government relations, environmental and antitrust. The combination also bolsters Collier Shannon's depth in litigation and other practices in Kelley Drye offices in New York, Chicago, Stamford, Conn., Brussels and elsewhere.
