To Our Alumni and Friends

While we were pleased that Northwestern Law once again was ranked as a top 10 school by U.S. News and World Report in 2005, I am focused on long-term improvements in our programs and reputation. If we continue to improve the objective quality of our students, faculty, and programs, I am convinced that our efforts will be recognized across the country and around the world. Our strategic plan includes a commitment to accountability, and as promised, this performance report informs our stakeholders of the past year's accomplishments and challenges.

As you will see, this fall we enrolled one of our strongest JD and JD-MBA classes, as well as the most talented LLM, LLM/Kellogg, LLM Tax, and MSJ-MSL students. We also moved closer to our admissions goals of interviewing all applicants and enrolling a class in which 100 percent of the JD students have had at least two years of work experience. This year's entering class is also our most diverse to date. We have often been recognized as one of the nation's most diverse law schools, and while we have made strides over the past several years in increasing diversity, we could still do better in a few particular areas. Our Admissions and Student Affairs teams remain committed to this goal and are currently working together to develop a plan to improve our efforts.

We also have made significant advances on our goal to recruit top scholars. Four outstanding research, six Bluhm Legal Clinic, and three Communication and Legal Reasoning faculty members as well as nearly 20 visiting faculty members have or will join the Northwestern Law faculty in 2005–06. In addition, four of our current research faculty members were promoted to full professors of law.

On the curricular front, we have expanded course offerings to provide students with the widest range of choices. They now have more flexibility in pursuing academic research through independent study and our new Directed Reading and Research course. Our Bluhm Legal Clinic has added an Investment Protection Center to focus on small dollar arbitration claims. Ours is one of fewer than 10 such centers in the country and the first among law schools in the Midwest. We also are now offering a Common Law Reasoning course for all our LLM students. The course is a modified version of the first-year JD course Communication and Legal Reasoning.

We are still investigating the market for our Executive LLM programs to determine if enough demand exists to warrant expansion into other locations. We have recently changed partners for our three-year-old program in Seoul and are now working with the Kaist Graduate School of Management to enroll the class of 2007. We had hoped to enroll the first class in the Madrid program with the Instituto de Empresa in October 2005, but we have pushed that date back to later next year in order to focus on marketing efforts. We also have signed a letter of intent with Fudan University to begin a program in Shanghai next year. In addition, our non-degree joint Executive Education effort with Kellogg made some small but significant strides on which we hope to expand.

As you can see, although we celebrate important accomplishments each year, we still have much to do and great opportunities for advancement remain within our reach. The tremendous financial support of alumni and friends has helped sustain our strategic efforts, and continued support at every level is essential to our overall success. The Law School Fund is the backbone of the annual budget, making possible many important programs such as the ones mentioned throughout this report. I urge you to continue to contribute to the Law School in the coming year at the level with which you are comfortable as a statement of your support.

Finally, it is important that we stay in touch as we move forward. Please visit our Web site (www.law.northwestern.edu) for the latest updates, and as I have often said to our students, my door is always open and my e-mail (dearlawdean@law.northwestern.edu) is always on.

Since developing the strategic plan in 1998 we have focused on attracting a diverse group of mature, experienced students from across the country and around the world. Our unique admissions program, which includes interviews and a preference for work experience, continues to enable us to select applicants with not only the highest academic promise but also the interpersonal and communication skills needed to succeed in law school and their future careers.

In terms of median LSAT scores students in the bottom of this year's entering class are stronger than those in the middle only a few years ago.

Work Experience

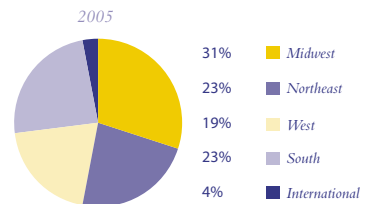

DIVERSITY

Our record of attracting a diverse entering JD class remains strong. We continue to enroll nearly as many women as men, and more than one-third of the entering class is ethnically and/or racially diverse.

We also continue to attract students from across the country and around the world. With 70 percent of entering JD and JD-MBA students coming from outside the Midwest, we now have one of the the most geographically diverse first-year JD classes of any law school.

JD-MBA Program

All JD-MBA students possess several years of full-time work experience and a well defined career plan that incorporates both degrees. All applicants interview with Kellogg admissions staff or an alumni interviewer.

We continue to expand the number and variety of LLM programs. In addition to the general LLM and the LLM/Kellogg degrees that have been options for several years, we have more recently added an Executive LLM program abroad, in Seoul, South Korea, and beginning in 2006 we will offer one in Madrid, Spain. We are also currently exploring options in Shanghai, China.

FACULTY TEACHING AWARDS

During the past year we honored our most outstanding professors with awards for excellence in teaching. The 2004–05 student-voted teaching awards include:

The Robert Childres Memorial Award for Teaching Excellence

James Speta, Professor of Law

Outstanding First-Year Course Professor

Martin H. Redish, Louis and Harriet Ancel Professor of Law and Public Policy

Outstanding Professor of a Small Class

Kimberly Yuracko, Professor of Law

Outstanding Adjunct Professor

Howard Nagelberg, senior partner, Barack Ferrazzano Kirschbaum Perlman & Negelberg

In addition, the Dean's Teaching Awards honor faculty for high-quality teaching as measured by student teaching evaluation and their student load (number of students taught and contact hours). Recipients of the 2004–05 Dean's Teaching Award are:

Robert P. Burns, Professor of Law

Clinton W. Francis, Professor of Law

Thomas F. Geraghty, Associate Dean of Clinical Education; Professor of Law; Director, Bluhm Legal Clinic

Steve Lubet, Professor of Law; Director, Bartlit Center for Trial Strategy and the Program on Advocacy and Professionalism

Fred S. McChesney, Class of 1967
James B. Haddad Professor of Law

Thomas H. Morsch, Clinical Professor of Law; Director, Small Business Opportunity Center

Leonard S. Rubinowitz, Professor of Law

Samuel Tenenbaum, Clinical Assistant Professor of Law; Director, Investor Protection Center

FACULTY CONFERENCES, 2004–05

“The 4th Annual Transatlantic Dialogue: Reforming the United Nations,” organized by Douglass Cassel, Clinical Professor of Law, Jan. 24–25, 2005

“Law and Positive Political Theory: Legal Doctrine and Political Control” organized by Emerson Tiller, Professor of Law, April 29–30, 2005

“Teaching Contract Drafting” organized by Susan J. Irion, Clinical Assistant Professor of Law, July 20–21, 2005

UPCOMING FACULTY CONFERENCES, 2005–06

Leonard S. Rubinowitz, Professor of Law, has organized a conference titled “Commemorating the 40th Anniversary of Chicago’s Landmark Gautreaux Public Housing Desegregation Case” that will take place in spring 2006. The conference will examine and assess the implications and impact of the Gautreaux public housing desegregation litigation, which was filed in 1966 and resulted in a landmark Supreme Court decision in 1976. Four decades after the case began, the remedial processes remain active and influential in Chicago, with no end in sight. The conference will address questions related to the ghettoization of African-Americans that are implicated in this litigation.

David Dana, Associate Dean for Faculty and Research and Professor of Law, has organized a conference titled “Why Do Companies Obey the Law, When They Do?” also in spring 2006. In the midst of all the news regarding corporate illegality, it is easy to forget that corporations often comply with law — and in particular positive law in the form of regulations. Such compliance is something of a mystery for the traditional rational actor model that dominates law and economics literature. Because the probability of detection and punishment is extremely low in many cases, and government penalties often involve relatively trivial sums, we might expect to see much less compliance than we do. The conference will explore the question of why, when corporations face minor expected penalties, might they nonetheless invest substantial resources in achieving compliance.

CURRICULUM

During the first year, Northwestern Law JD students learn fundamental analytical thinking in the traditional core courses of Civil Procedure, Constitutional Law, Contracts, Criminal Law, Property, and Torts. They are simultaneously challenged to think in new ways and to communicate effectively by working in teams on projects, presentations, and writing assignments in their Communication and Legal Reasoning course and our unique Lawyer as Problem Solver program. After completing the first year, students take various approaches to their studies such as focusing on theory and research through our Owen L. Coon/James L. Rahl Senior Research Program, gaining real-world experience through our Bluhm Legal Clinic, exploring international opportunities through International Team Projects, or cross-training in business by taking classes at the Kellogg School of Management.

Owen L. Coon/James A. Rahl Senior Research

An Academic/Theoretical Approach to Legal Studies

The Owen L. Coon/James A. Rahl Senior Research Program gives third-year Northwestern Law JD students the opportunity to work closely with our renowned faculty exploring answers to challenging questions of doctrine and policy. Each year more than 50 students are paired with supervising professors, experts in their field, to conduct research on the most pertinent current and historical legal issues.

International Opportunities

Globalization has increased competition in the international legal market and led to regular interaction between foreign and U.S. lawyers. In 1998, Northwestern Law developed the International Team Projects (ITP) course to prepare students for both public and private practice in the worldwide legal market. The program combines semester-long research, an intense two-week field study abroad in the spring, and a final group project on a particular topic. The number of students that participate and the countries that are studied continue to grow each year.

Executive and Professional Education

PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION — CONTINUING LEGAL EDUCATION

We reached more than 185 different law firms and more than 275 different corporations through our Professional Education Programs in 2004–05. In addition, representatives from more than 55 county, state, and federal agencies including several branches of the military sent participants. This past year, we also worked with more than 250 volunteer faculty members, advisors, and committee members who are prominent members of the bar, including practitioners, academics, members of governmental agencies and judiciary.

scheduled for October 2005, was designed in cooperation with the Industrial Research Institute, a 250-member association for Research and Development management. Law School faculty also taught in a Law School/Kellogg program for Cooper Tire’s board of directors, in Kellogg’s Advanced Executive Program, and in Kellogg’s Non-Profit Management Programs. Discussions were initiated in 2004–05 to include a business law course taught by Law School faculty in graduate degree programs in engineering management.

COMMUNITY

An increasing number of applicants to top law schools are choosing to come to Northwestern Law because they recognize the opportunities our unique community provides. While other top law schools may boast of a non-competitive environment and a strong sense of community, no other law school in the country comes close to taking the steps that we have to instill and foster such an atmosphere. Our sense of community is engrained in everything we do and extends beyond the walls of the Law School to include thousands of alumni and professionals in law, business, and government from across the country and around the world.

ALUMNI PARTICIPATION

In addition to reunion, the centerpiece of our alumni program, each year we invite alumni to numerous events on our Chicago campus, host alumni receptions at firms and businesses around the country, and support a growing network of regional and international alumni societies. This past year, more than 700 graduates participated in networking receptions, student outreach programs, and a premier social event for Law and Kellogg alumni in the Chicago area and more than 300 served on alumni committees or boards.

Firm and Corporate Affiliates

By supporting Northwestern Law projects and initiatives, law firms and corporations have the opportunity to send representatives to participate in programs and gain recognition through acknowledgement in printed promotional materials, at activities and events, and on the Northwestern Law Web site.

To further support firm and corporate marketing objectives to recruit top law students, the Firm and Corporate Affiliates Program also facilitates student fundraising efforts. We connect Firm and Corporate Affiliates with our diverse student body for a variety of sponsorship activities.

Affiliates work directly with the leaders of more than 40 student organizations such as the Diversity Coalition, the Women's Leadership Coalition, and the JD-MBA Association, to name a few. In return, our affiliates ensure that Northwestern Law continues to lead the way in preparing students for productive leadership, professional success, and personal fulfillment in a complex and changing world.

To learn more about the Firm and Corporate Affiliates Program visit www.law.northwestern.edu/firmaffiliates.

During the 2004–05 academic year, more than 60 law firms and corporations sponsored activities and events, including student programs and continuing legal education courses, as Northwestern Law Firm and Corporate Affiliates. In total, affiliates contributed more than $473,000 in support. As a result, our campus is bustling with programming that further educates and advances the Northwestern Law community by connecting it with the local and national legal community.
